

Helping others through trust-based relationships

Scott LePor, D.O., is a family physician who resides in Austin, Texas. He is a husband, father, foster and adoptive parent. Through his experiences as a foster parent, Scott sought further training through Texas Christian University Institute of Child Development to help heal the life traumas of children from hard places with the evidence-based neuroscience of Trust Based Relational Intervention. The principles have proved to be so life changing that Scott now shares this training through lectures and workshops to foster/adoptive parents as well as other health care professionals and various organizations and states. These principles also became the foundation for becoming Medical Director of Patient Experience and Physician Engagement at the hospital where he worked through building a culture centered around meeting the needs of others through trust-based relationships. Scott is currently the Medical Director of the Texas Juvenile Justice Department and is using the evidence-based neuroscience of interpersonal neurobiology to implement the “Texas Model” to their youth in need. He is also a member of the Texas HHSC Cross Systems Trauma-Informed Workgroup and a co-chairman for the subcommittee on Screening, Assessment, and Treatment for Trauma-Informed Care. Having a strong spiritual worldview has also been a driving force for his purpose and passion in helping those in need. Scott has also enjoyed sharing knowledge on various aspects of health in publications, podcasts, and social media.

In his spare time, Scott enjoys spending time with his wife and three precious girls in daily routines as well as sharing life experiences together. Scott also enjoys promoting health through regular exercise and a whole-food plant-based diet which he also encourages with his patients.

Rochelle LePor, D.O., is a retired Family Physician, stay-at-home foster and adoptive mom who resides in Austin, Texas. She graduated in 1992 with a BA in Psychology from Manhattanville College. She met her husband, Scott LePor, while in Medical School in Kansas City, MO, and they married in 1998. She practiced medicine until 2013, when their first child was born. Their family began their foster journey in 2015 and have since fostered 12 children and have adopted two. They were both introduced to TBRI* through Faith Bridge Foster Care, but their lives shifted when Scott was awarded a scholarship to become a TBRI Practitioner through Texas Christian University. All the knowledge Scott learned through TCU, he shared with Rochelle, and both began applying these principles in their approach with their own children, foster children and the biological families of their foster children. Scott and Rochelle have since shared their life-changing journey and have taught other foster and adoptive parents the connecting principles of TBRI. In February 2022 Rochelle completed her training as a TBRI Practitioner. She loves sharing her many humbling mom-stories and her newly gained knowledge to those in the foster system.
